

Trinidad, the last leg of the South American Cruise before returning to the United States, provided the tropical heat which crewmembers remembered so well from Acapulco. This final respite in the long journey was mainly a fueling stop, but as far as crewmembers are concerned, it was a short, but memorable liberty.

